- 1. Transmitter 14, located in building No. 1 of the Main Radio Station in Koenigswusterhausen, was employed as a jamming transmitter. The transmitter had been used previously for transmissions to Chine.
- 2. A second, smaller jamming transmitter, which was mobile, was located in the living quarters of VOPO member Jansen at Auf dem Funkerberg 13. Jansen could adjust the transmitter to various wave lengths with the aid of a key. The person or office from whom Jansen received his instructions is not known nor is the actual content of his orders.
- A third, small jamming transmitter was located in the attic of the law court building. This building had been made available to the VOPO.
- 4. Another small jamming transmitter was located in the Post Office in Koenigswusterhausen. Apparently this transmitter was not in operation because no jamming had been noticed in the immediate neighborhood of the postal building.
- 5. The transmitters located in Jansen's quarters, in the law court building and in the Post Office had all been constructed by VEB RFT at Dabendorf and Koepenick.
